Dear President Trump and Administration,

We, the members of the Homeschool Freedom Coalition, are writing to express our strong support for the dissolution of the U.S. Department of Education. We believe this action would not only align with principles of small government and state rights but would also enhance the educational landscape for all American families, particularly those who choose homeschooling.

The Department of Education has historically expanded its reach into areas that should remain within state jurisdiction, often at the expense of educational innovation and parental control. Homeschooling, which thrives on flexibility and tailored education, has been disproportionately affected by federal regulations that do not account for the unique nature of home education.

We, members of the Homeschool Freedom Coalition, advocate for:

- Returning control of education to the states, allowing them to foster environments where educational innovation can flourish without federal constraints.
- Protecting and expanding homeschooling freedoms, ensuring that families can educate their children according to their values, beliefs, and educational philosophies without undue federal oversight.
- Promoting a system where education is driven by community needs rather than bureaucratic mandates, fostering a more responsive and effective educational system.

We urge you to consider these points and support the dissolution of the Department of Education. This action would not only empower states but would also reaffirm the rights of parents to direct the education of their children, particularly in the context of homeschooling.

Sincerely,
Emily Fort
